Diversity symposium set for Friday

From Staff Reports

State Labor Commissioner Michael Thurmond will be the keynote speaker at a cultural diversity symposium scheduled for 10 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. Friday at the Georgia Center for Continuing Education, 1197 S. Lumpkin St.

The symposium, organized by the University of Georgia Center for Humanities and Arts (CHA), is titled "Cultural Diversity at the University of Georgia in the 21st Century." It will explore the educational and social benefits of cultural diversity in higher education and will identify how the university can make diversity a part of its character.

"Our target audience is really university faculty and administration, but we're not excluding anyone," said Betty Jean Craige, director of CHA. "Our purpose is to brainstorm about steps we can take to make the university a truly more integrated institution and to look at how we can make it more hospitable to all races, genders and cultures."

Included in the schedule are two panel discussions, "What is Cultural Diversity?" and "UGA at the Crossroads." The panels and moderators comprise the following UGA faculty: Rodney Bennett, interim associate provost for institutional diversity; Lioba Moshi, director of the African Studies Institute; Han Park, director of the Center for the Study of Global Issues; Eve Troutt-Powell, assistant professor of history; Jace Weaver, associate professor of religion; Rob Shewfelt, professor of food science and technology; Deryl Bailey, assistant professor of professional studies; Fausto Sarmiento, director of the Office of International Education, and Karen Webb, associate director of admissions.

The symposium is sponsored by the Office of the President, the Office of the Provost, the Office of Institutional Diversity and the Office of the Vice President for Instruction.
